.. In an abandoned government lab in China, the most corrupt FBI agent in history unleashes the prototype of the Ghostship, a huge, genetically engineered mosquito that is armed with a fast-acting, deadly biological weapon, making it a formidable opponent to the military and private security forces. Literary significance and reception The author and illustrator received a 2008 Golden Kite Award for Best Young Adult Graphic Novel. This is their second book in the trilogy to receive this honor. The book was also longlisted for the 2007 Michael L. Printz Award. Critical reviews Critical reviews for the trilogy have been mostly positive. School Library Journal called it an "engaging historical-fantasy adventure." Booklist said it was a "futuristic thriller", and concluded: "Although this first installment is a bit uneven, the series has a good potential for reaching beyond the usual YA demographic and appealing to teens who want something different... The futuristic, techno-fantasy elements are exciting, and the story is dramatic enough to hold the attention of older teens and adults." Kirkus Reviews gave the book a starred review, stating: "This vividly imagined story is best for readers seeking adventure, science fiction, and a message about the nature of power. Young adults will enjoy this book and hopefully will begin to wonder about the hidden ways in which they can affect their world. Although the book's main characters are teenagers, a reading group could easily be set up to discuss how and why the teens act the way they do." Kirkus Reviews also selected the book as a Kirkus Prize Finalist for 2007. The book has also received some negative reviews. The Horn Book Magazine said the book was "too heavily cliched to be acceptable," and recommended the book only for high school and college-age readers. The School Library Journal review by Fiona Dowsett was critical of the portrayal of the main character as a teen, saying that "This is, after all, a book for teens. But far from being attractive, smart or adventurous, Tyler is a real jerk who constantly causes trouble and generally behaves with the attitude of a nine-year-old. As an FBI trainee, Tyler not only cannot be trusted to handle sensitive information but is incredibly stupid, and consequently he falls into all manner of troubles from which he can't extricate himself."
